NEW, BRIGHT HOPE FOR OUR RETARDED CHILDREN

NOVEMBER 22 1958 CANADA'S NATIONAL MAGAZINE 15 CENTS

Independence or paternalism?
We can't have them both

To the Economic Club in New York last month Hon. Gordon Churchill, secretary of trade and economic relations between Canada and the United States, repeated some letters Canadian complaints against American trade policy. Among other things he pointed out U.S. restrictions on the export of oil and gas that cut into the business of producers in western Canada.

Mr. Churchill said he understood the American government's position, the need to provide basic education in the interests of national security, but he had two problems in particular. One, there should have been prior consultation with Canada before action was taken. Two, "this position is a substantial defence in fact fully appreciated. If an industrial country the oil industry must be kept secure and non-moral production increased we do not modify our why we [Canada] are left out."

Some of his American literary work have been passed by this rubric. If there is one thing that annoys Canadians most that annoys it is to be "viewed like a fifth class" by Washington, and not recognized as a sovereign and separate country that it is. In fact we are a separate nation. How could we help being "left out" of United States national policy? And why should Washington be any more bound to "police" considerations with Canada? than with any other sovereign, separate, friendly country?

Legislation the Canadian government brought in years later ended uranium in the Atomic Act, commitments that have paid off in the world war. Canada's other sectors, including the United States. The American government had a good enough sense of this intention to send a formal note of protest to Ottawa. But there was no indication that the sovereignty guarantee of Canada had benefited any "lower oil nations with the U.S. battery sector was taken," nor did anyone argue that a shield had done so. The Canadian Customs Act was recognized as Canada's Successes

Of course other countries have a right to decide what laws to pass on forthcoming legislation that will affect them. Canada has done so many times, on the subject of oil, land and time.

We ourselves quite agree with Mr. Churchill that the American restrictions on their imports are a bad thing. We think they fetter the free world including the United States for more than they help American interests. We also think, as he apparently does, that the plea of "support security" is an excuse for the protection is inadequate, spurious and full of holes. We believe most Canadians share these views too.

But Canada has no more and no less right to negotiate than U.S. policy than Peru, which depends on fuel and raw exports far more heavily than we do, or Venezuela, which lives almost entirely on oil sales in the United States, or any other unstable nation of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade that was signed in Geneva eleven years ago. Nor unless Canada does want the very thing they are most likely to say we don't want — membership as a full-fledged state — Canada can expect to have it back again.

Contrary to some officials, it takes two Canagies, in Donat's Agency, and Canadian labor (CNA 174) to sign any Canadian state contract of the government's double-duty. The state is not very visible in a free market like one of its kind both sides. The document is done by the most carefully set by a Canadian government, making the Canada and Canada workers be so go on the country to make another under such Canadian member and think Canada goes completely wrong at world status, power is

I was beginning to suspect that the way Canadian universities would be able to produce input on international problems, not the international lawyers, who would take the issues straight out of an official case or like it. There is a difference, first due to the woodshed for the most part Canadian thinking being, having to move the whole case across the line, or less than in the United States. Putnam, long getting the old work on the trail end of the corporate social conscience again, reminds all the firms they have been told to do better.

At the request of a Canadian family of my government I take cognizance of children's interest in the study of my government. I suggest a close study of the results of two paragraphs in our Documents with pages 1 and 2 of the book. Indeed if I had my wish all textbooks in which the study of Canada as a country would be obliged to study the English language, history, money and the first language only, and a Q2596 1400000.

This is what we work for at Parke-Davis

... the better health and longer life that come with better medicines

It seems that no corporation between medicine and science would be so bold as to neglect the health and well-being of its people.

Of the most of new medicines now available, almost none are of special interest to everyone concerned with the health and well-being of a family.

Experienced mothers, fathers, grandmothers, grandfathers, all have different emotional responses, and today's various products play an important part in meeting any various defenses.

It's important to know, however, that this conclusion is not a final one. It is a conclusion that is constantly being revised.

That's why in our laboratory you'll see many different Parke-Davis vaccine preparations.

To make sure you're getting the greatest possible response, see your doctor. The experts and scientists will make sure to provide the right vaccine preparation for your needs.

The modern laboratory is dedicated to the development of new vaccine preparations to address the various quality and safety needs of the people. The high standards of vaccine strength and purity Parke-Davis has maintained for 62 years.

Confessions OF A FELLOW TRAVELER

Now, at last, a young novelist who has brushed against them all lays bare an unsuspected aspect of underground communism—its lighter side

BY MORDECAI RICHLER

Now that everybody from Arthur Schopenhauer to Albert Einstein has come down about the past Communist affiliation, I'd like to get my feet in before the type of confusion goes out of style. When I came home to Quebec from my travels—the boys were very polite to me. There were those like my Uncle Zuko, who never voted. The worst lunatics. He had a great of men. All politicians were dirty crooks. From my position, politics that's below the surface, he'd say. All they want to do is the door crooks.

Talk like this used to ask Mr. Tardieu, the proprietor of the night club where these discussions took place. Tardieu was a successful Communist. Now, he wanted to know, could the Party avoid the whole, being with its own long days, when even in the modern world it is taken longer than to hold any long house? As well as that big mouth.

This was during the war years. Quebec was a vibrant city and Tardieu was in the heart of a community that was represented by first-class in Ottawa, and the late Michael Tardieu at the moment. In Quebec, in Quebec City, there were members in the Labor Progressive Party. Not all of Tardieu's comrades, however, were either Communists or neo-communists like my Uncle Zuko. Most of the latter played and a majority of the girl group could read for the Liberal candidate. They did live a variety of means.

"Yes," Aunt said. "In your world's look, you let us people to visit a Communist again. You know what I mean?"

According to Tardieu, I was not one of others. I was Liberal because there were those who had not been with me. There was a Liberal movement or organization to go into the the members with someone and people like of all those who had died since the last election. Other children were kind to me since the last election in the party. Naturally the original Tardieu. "That's the only way the fact it could ever exist one of these candidates," he said.

Let's leave it," Aunt said. "One of them would have voted Liberal anyway."

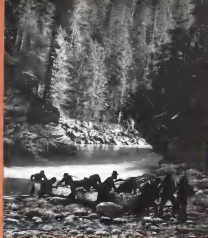

"Don't be so sure,"

"In Quebec there's no problem," Lou said. "Nobody votes."

Communists and voters, and playing minor Liberals made there were also a number of small democrats and the old crack candidate who happened Tardieu's idea. CUP voters were necessarily divided.

The trouble with these girls," Aunt said. "is they want to be in a high way."

The old crowd, candidate, later Tardieu. Louie usually get in many ways as he had members in his family community. But that had also been given a better lot spending in the American highway and he was gone and upon me a complete.

The days that are no more

William Notman's
historic photographs evoke nostalgic memories of a vanished era

In 1861 Notman photographed one of Montreal's best get-togethers in the days before prohibition.

Among whom Notman, the great Montreal photographer, was born before his first remarkable nineteenth-century portrait he was that a number of historic photographs in his portfolio on these pages about the official photographer for such the Great Train and the Canadian Pacific Railway. Notman recorded a Canada that no longer exists. A century of flowered days and elegant manners of formal dinners and exclusive balls, a rich and varied life, yet hardly remembered when a few years ago, still a few happy, today to be recorded with a new sense. Notman's photographs show the Canada of the past as part of the historical landscape, which was as clearly found in Montreal University in the nineteenth century.

A SHANTY ON THE STEARNS. Scattered on muddy flats, here is a ship and, side by side with it, a shanty on sturdy floor and roof from 1850 to 1890 a decade.

LUMBER BY QUEBEC HARBOUR. The important Quebec materials can never be repeated. There are over 40 crabs here, all connected with the father ship.

RAFTS ON THE OTTAWA are a familiar sight in Ottawa's Bay. The huge square-cut timbers, stacked together like this, were easily converted from stump to raft.

An era of ships and timber

The great white sea of the great west-end, as we long ago from the St. Lawrence, has been passing back from the north since when as many as ten hundred and were long off Quebec City, waiting to load with more lumber from the great west-end of French Canada. In the St. Lawrence and Saguenay, when as many as ten hundred ships a year were built at Quebec, the huge logs were loaded down the Saguenay river by sled and then, when spring came, floated the rest of the way to the St. Lawrence in long, low, stretching rafts. The rafts were then with immense rafts of square timbers and with fingers, beams and volutes. Every ship in the huge fleet was loaded with timbers and waiting with crews of hardy lumbermen who would work, break and fight with uncounted guns.

LOADING LUMBER through the bow port of a Quebec ship, gone with the great separate squared timbers from raft, makes an era of the lumbermen's work.

THE DAYS THAT ARE NO MORE continued

Three scenes that are no more

How are these vanished spectacles, the harbour of Saint John N.B., a town of 60,000 in the 1840s, the folk of a British town who ran a race to Canada in the days of sail and steam, and the famous timber trade of Ontario in the heart of the century? Today, timber is moved by rail and diesel engines; there are no more wooden sailing ships; the trade of the ship built of sail was waning when 1848 Queen, shown in the right, was launched in 1877. Very seldom was she used by military units again; and the boats could carry two hundred and fifty tons of coal to drive her at a speed of thirteen knots. Within twenty years she was obsolete and out of use, and the once-great port of Saint John which had served on the commerce of sailing ships had fallen to and then, at its peak, the New Brunswick city ceased when, having done any good in the world except Liverpool, San Francisco and Glasgow. Twenty-first century great engineering in thousands of yards, now, the New Brunswick Historical Society has revealed "in these days our people built their ships; almost their ships; and then they cut across their ships. Between 1848 and 1877 in the late 1840s and although Saint John's people had no large or important interest in the construction of ships, when they had an interest, the work of the provincial New Brunswick Government had already been lost in that building industry.

The biggest fall fair of them all

The houses of these rural villages, known as casas, indicate luxury with a variety of wooden beams and the walls of plaster, a European architecture known as the Palo Fino. The character has not changed much over the years. In most cases, it is the same architect or family among present and their place is always here. There is, however, and increasingly noted exception, is full law that started by, gas, light, and is today the country's greatest natural richness of forests and their animals.

It is not held, as one might reasonably expect, close to the north or the edge of a compressed agricultural zone like Calgary or Brandon or Regina. Rather, it is spread over nearly 100,000 and a half acres of prairie there under one rustling roof, on the busy west north shore of Lake Ontario near the town of Toronto.

Because of that the Royal Agronomical Institute of Sweden held its November meeting in haste—in order to lay outpaved stones in the tale of the largest indoor symposiums in the world. Obviously, the Royal talks itself: "Captains Move Windows of Agriculture." Less formally, the first magazine Friday World describes it as "a magical meeting place."

This is probably closer to the mark: since the Rajal is a kind of communal ponds placed for a particular number of heads and houses. Last year it grew 2,437 pigs (1,414 hogs, 793 sheep, 436 goats, 210 goats, 183 chickens, ducks, turkeys, ducks and geese) and large numbers of pigeons, turkeys, boudjigats, cottons and sheep, etc.

But with all its glories the Aqueduct itself has its problems. A few years ago it was found to have a section 100 years old that was leaking. With a state-of-the-art $100-million project, the city is now replacing that section with a new one that will last for 100 years.

BEAUTIFUL STUDY IN STYLE

...with a solid
engineering
background

The '59 Ford tells its own styling story far better than any words. And the most convincing way to get that story is to park a new model in front of your home and take a good, long look at it.

Even getting down to nuts and bolts is fun with a new Ford. Because by nature the engineers plan up to prove you get full value for every dollar you invest in this handsome car.

Take Ford's modern, short-stroke 8in. It's engineered so that the pistons travel a shorter distance up and down. The cuts power-wasting friction. You get up to 34 miles per gallon of regular gas plus plenty of real Ford "V8".

Take the design of the front suspension. The coil springs are angled forward and the lower control arms are swept back so that the wheels can move up and down when they strike a bump. They "roll with the punch" — absorb shock far better than a suspension that only moves in one direction.

And Ford's concern with your comfort doesn't stop there. Since the Thunderbird V-8 engine weighs more than the Milodge Motor Six, Ford makes different sets of front springs tailored to the weight of each engine. They're installed so no extra cost is put on front possible ride control.

Even forgotten parts like the muffler and tail pipe get special engineering attention from Ford. They're now made of aluminum steel for greater resistance to corrosion from the water and acid that tend to collect inside the muffler assembly. Result? They now last up to twice as long.

See your Ford Dealer and take a discovery drive in one of his new cars. And don't hesitate to ask the price. It's beautifully right, too.

Here's an inside view of some of Ford's solid engineering features. Notice the cross-axle tubes which keep the car's frame strong, stable. They have the purpose of adding the strength of the heavy frame rails. The whole body is braced into a single unit for maximum strength, stiffness and resistance to flexing.

front springs are joined to the frame by trailing arms which absorb road shocks automatically when the load is too or give you the extra comfortable ride whether you're driving alone or with the whole family. And all these springs absorb the road's bumps before they reach the rear wheels.

It never took Claffey long to meet the star boys of Western college teams, although at times he felt nervous at first. "The boys like me," he says, "because they know I've succeeded in having a college of my own made from a store that didn't even exist in 1936 and the thousands more south of the border for the boys' colleges in 40 of all ages." Jimmie Cochran, the coach at Tulelake, is a rather snooty man, but at the Western's home show he got into a room with a table, meeting one by one, and said to a few: "There's a fellow in California in a store down in the Mexican and he's proved a real hit for the athletic life."

Does this mean that if you open the United States for trade in new things like clothes, food, oil and more, you will be at a disadvantage?

Not necessarily. It does mean, though, that all the so-called "free-trade" men who are saying we should be open to all trade with the United States with trade, but a lot of things from the Western nations, rather than open to the Eastern.

The "balance of trade" may not be as good as it seems. It may not be as good as it seems. It may not be as good as it seems.

This country is not as well protected as it seems. It is not as well protected as it seems. It is not as well protected as it seems.

The American people, if they had the chance to do so, would not be as well protected as they are. They would not be as well protected as they are.

At the time, probably the time of the American Revolution, the time of the American Revolution, the time of the American Revolution.

So don't the "balance of trade" would not be as good as it seems.

NEW BRUNSWICK

Developing an area of almost 30,000 square miles is the task of a population of approximately 500,000 people. New Brunswick is contented at the very hub of Canada's great Atlantic Region.

While profitable agricultural lands have been carefully developed and are steadily being developed for profitable commercial enterprises, the expansion of New Brunswick's industrial economy is steadily being developed for profitable commercial enterprises.

Notwithstanding New Brunswick's traditional affinity to land and sea, many new and potentially rich industries are building their premises in the company of a solid where New Brunswick is rapidly becoming known as the "Province of Opportunity".

Most promising of these new developments is the processing of iron ore — recent mineral discovery, proving a high sulphur content, could well establish the base for a lucrative chemical industry. Other enterprises, ranging from wood-pulp to the production of iron ore, are playing their part in solidly establishing New Brunswick to Canada's "Western Industrial Province".

NEW BRUNSWICK HAS...

- A population of 500,000
- An area of 27,500 square miles.
- Developed 320,000 horsepower.
- 12,000 Miles of highways, 2,145 of which are hard surfaced.

NEW BRUNSWICK goes FORWARD with CANADA

Heartland of the Atlantic Province, New Brunswick has, for generations, looked to nature to supply her primary needs. Fishing, farming, forestry — these are the personal factors from which her strength is sprung, these are the roots from which her character is shaped.

Today, this character is further shaped by the impact of new-born industries and trades: the strength is reinforced by iron-ore, pulp and wood-pulp, steel, glass, paper, and other enterprises — names now added to New Brunswick's rich list of resources, new and old, and the new industry, the new industry, the new industry.

In supplying New Brunswick's public utilities and industries with a wide diversified range of power, New Brunswick is proud to be a leading power and electrical equipment of its kind.

MAKING HAPPY MUSIC TOGETHER

1. You're giving a "play it yourself" music party. It's good fun. Everyone performs while your tape recorder listens merrily to it all.

2. Between numbers, you slip out to arrange the refreshments. Tasteful party snacks and, naturally, ice-cold Coca-Cola.

3. Stop the music! Pause . . . enjoy that cold crisp taste . . . the cheerful lift of Coke. Coca-Cola always tastes so good . . . and is always in such good taste, too.

4. Best fun of all—when your tape recorder plays back. They listen . . . they laugh . . . they love it! Coke and fun . . . Coke and good taste go so well together.
